This torso shows the shortened arms, close against the body, typical of many Punuk images. The slightly swelling abdomen suggests the figure is female. It is engraved with a necklace and four bands across each arm and shoulder. The head was certainly broken off when the figure was still in use, since an ivory peg set into the break and a repair hole at the back of the neck show how the damaged head was once reattached. There is a deep-drilled circular pit in the lower part of the back, purpose unknown.
