A dense pixilated pattern is layered with a sketched square and cross in this monochrome print, creating a dynamic optical effect. Michael Kidner was a pioneer of Op Art in the 1960s, using colour and systemic structures to investigate optical perception and experience. In the 1980s and 90s Kidner's work became increasingly informed by the impact of chance and his interest in chaos theory.

This print is part of a portfolio published to coincide with the exhibition Between Dimensions at the Curwen Gallery, London in 1990. Kidner was one of eight artists selected by Mel Gooding to contribute to the exhibition and portfolio, which also featured work by Christine Hatt, Adam Barker-Mill, Ian Tyson, John Carter, Alan Johnston, Stanislav Kolibal and Gary Woodley.
